

Department of Economics
Radboud University Nijmegen
Nijmegen, The Netherlands

Associate / Full Professor in Finance (preferably Corporate Finance)

See website: www.ru.nl/vacatures

The Department of Economics at Radboud University Nijmegen is currently expanding its activities in Finance, in particular Corporate Finance. We seek applicants at the full professor level but welcome applications at the associate level too. Though we invite good applicants from all areas of finance, we are particularly interested in extending teaching and research capacity in the field of Corporate Finance.

Job Qualifications

Candidates must hold a PhD and have a high potential in terms of academic research and teaching. We require a demonstrated track record of high quality publications in peer reviewed journals. The successful candidate should be able and willing to share in the department's management. We prefer applicants who share our multidisciplinary approach to economics in general and finance in particular.

About the department

The department of Economics consists of four Chairs: Economic Theory and Policy, International Economics, Finance, and Accounting. The department is responsible for the development and quality of the bachelor and master-programmes in economics, as well as courses in economics in the other educational programmes offered by the faculty. The BA in Economics consists of three specializations: Business Economics, Finance, and International Economics. There are four specializations in the MA programme: Accounting and Control, International Economics and Business, International Economics, and Finance. Both the curriculum in Economics and the Department's research are characterized by a multidisciplinary approach, whereby in addition to the economics discipline, inspiration is sought from other areas, such as psychology, sociology, and philosophy.

About the faculty

The Nijmegen School of Management is an academic center of research and higher learning, particularly in the area of managerial and institutional issues within complex organizations in both the public and private domain. Seven different focus areas exist within the faculty: Business Administration, Public Administration, Political Science, Economics, Social and Political Sciences of the Environment, Human Geography and Spatial Planning. The faculty employs 250 full-time staff, of whom 200 are academics and 2,500 students are enrolled in its various educational programmes.

About the University

Radboud University Nijmegen was founded in 1923 and is one of the six general research universities in The Netherlands. It hosts nine faculties, among which theology, natural sciences, and a medical school. More than 18,000 students are enrolled in the various programmes. The entire staff is slightly less than 5,000. Some of its research institutes are world famous, such as the Donders Centre for Neuroscience and the Max Planck Institute for Psycholinguistics. The university is located at a green campus with excellent facilities in the southern part of Nijmegen. Nijmegen is the oldest town of the Netherlands.
